The orchestra of life plays on
So pleasing to the ear.

The words to the song have lost their meaning,
Still the melody is nice to hear.

Now the rhythm of the band speeds up,
The song's end seems very near.

The song could be continued,
If anyone would hear.

But one day the symbols will crash
And the band will disappear.

T. N. Finley

GRADUATE

The Silent Citizen

Students riot. Races clash. Crime grows. Traffic snarls. Cities decay. Millions of people say nothing, do nothing. The silent citizens. Men without mouths.

Other voices are heard. Loud voices, with passionate convictions, crying for action. Whether their causes are good or bad, right or wrong, the silent citizen looks away.

He's often well informed and he has good ideas of his own, but he saves them for his wife and friends and people he meets at cocktail parties. He never bothers to get them across to his congressman or his newspaper or City Hall or the school board. He never comes out in the open to confront the other point of view.

If he stays silent long enough, the other point of view wins out . . . unless its supporters suddenly become silent too. Then they go nowhere together, silently waiting for time to run out.

FOREWORD

To mature to learn to know to achieve to understand to be understood to accept the challenge of life and of the lives around you, to help, to love, in essence to reach out: the inglorious everyday existence provides stimulus for such action incessantly. Happiness is individual but involvement is universal. No one can be totally disjoint. The idealistic nature of such a proposal, however, is surpassed by its practicality. It is part of what makes us human.

We of the 1970 Chieftain present to you only a token study of involvement: — a study made in the microcosm of school life — one which is symbolic of human life. It symbolizes as well the coming generation which one day will have a world and a new generation to mold.

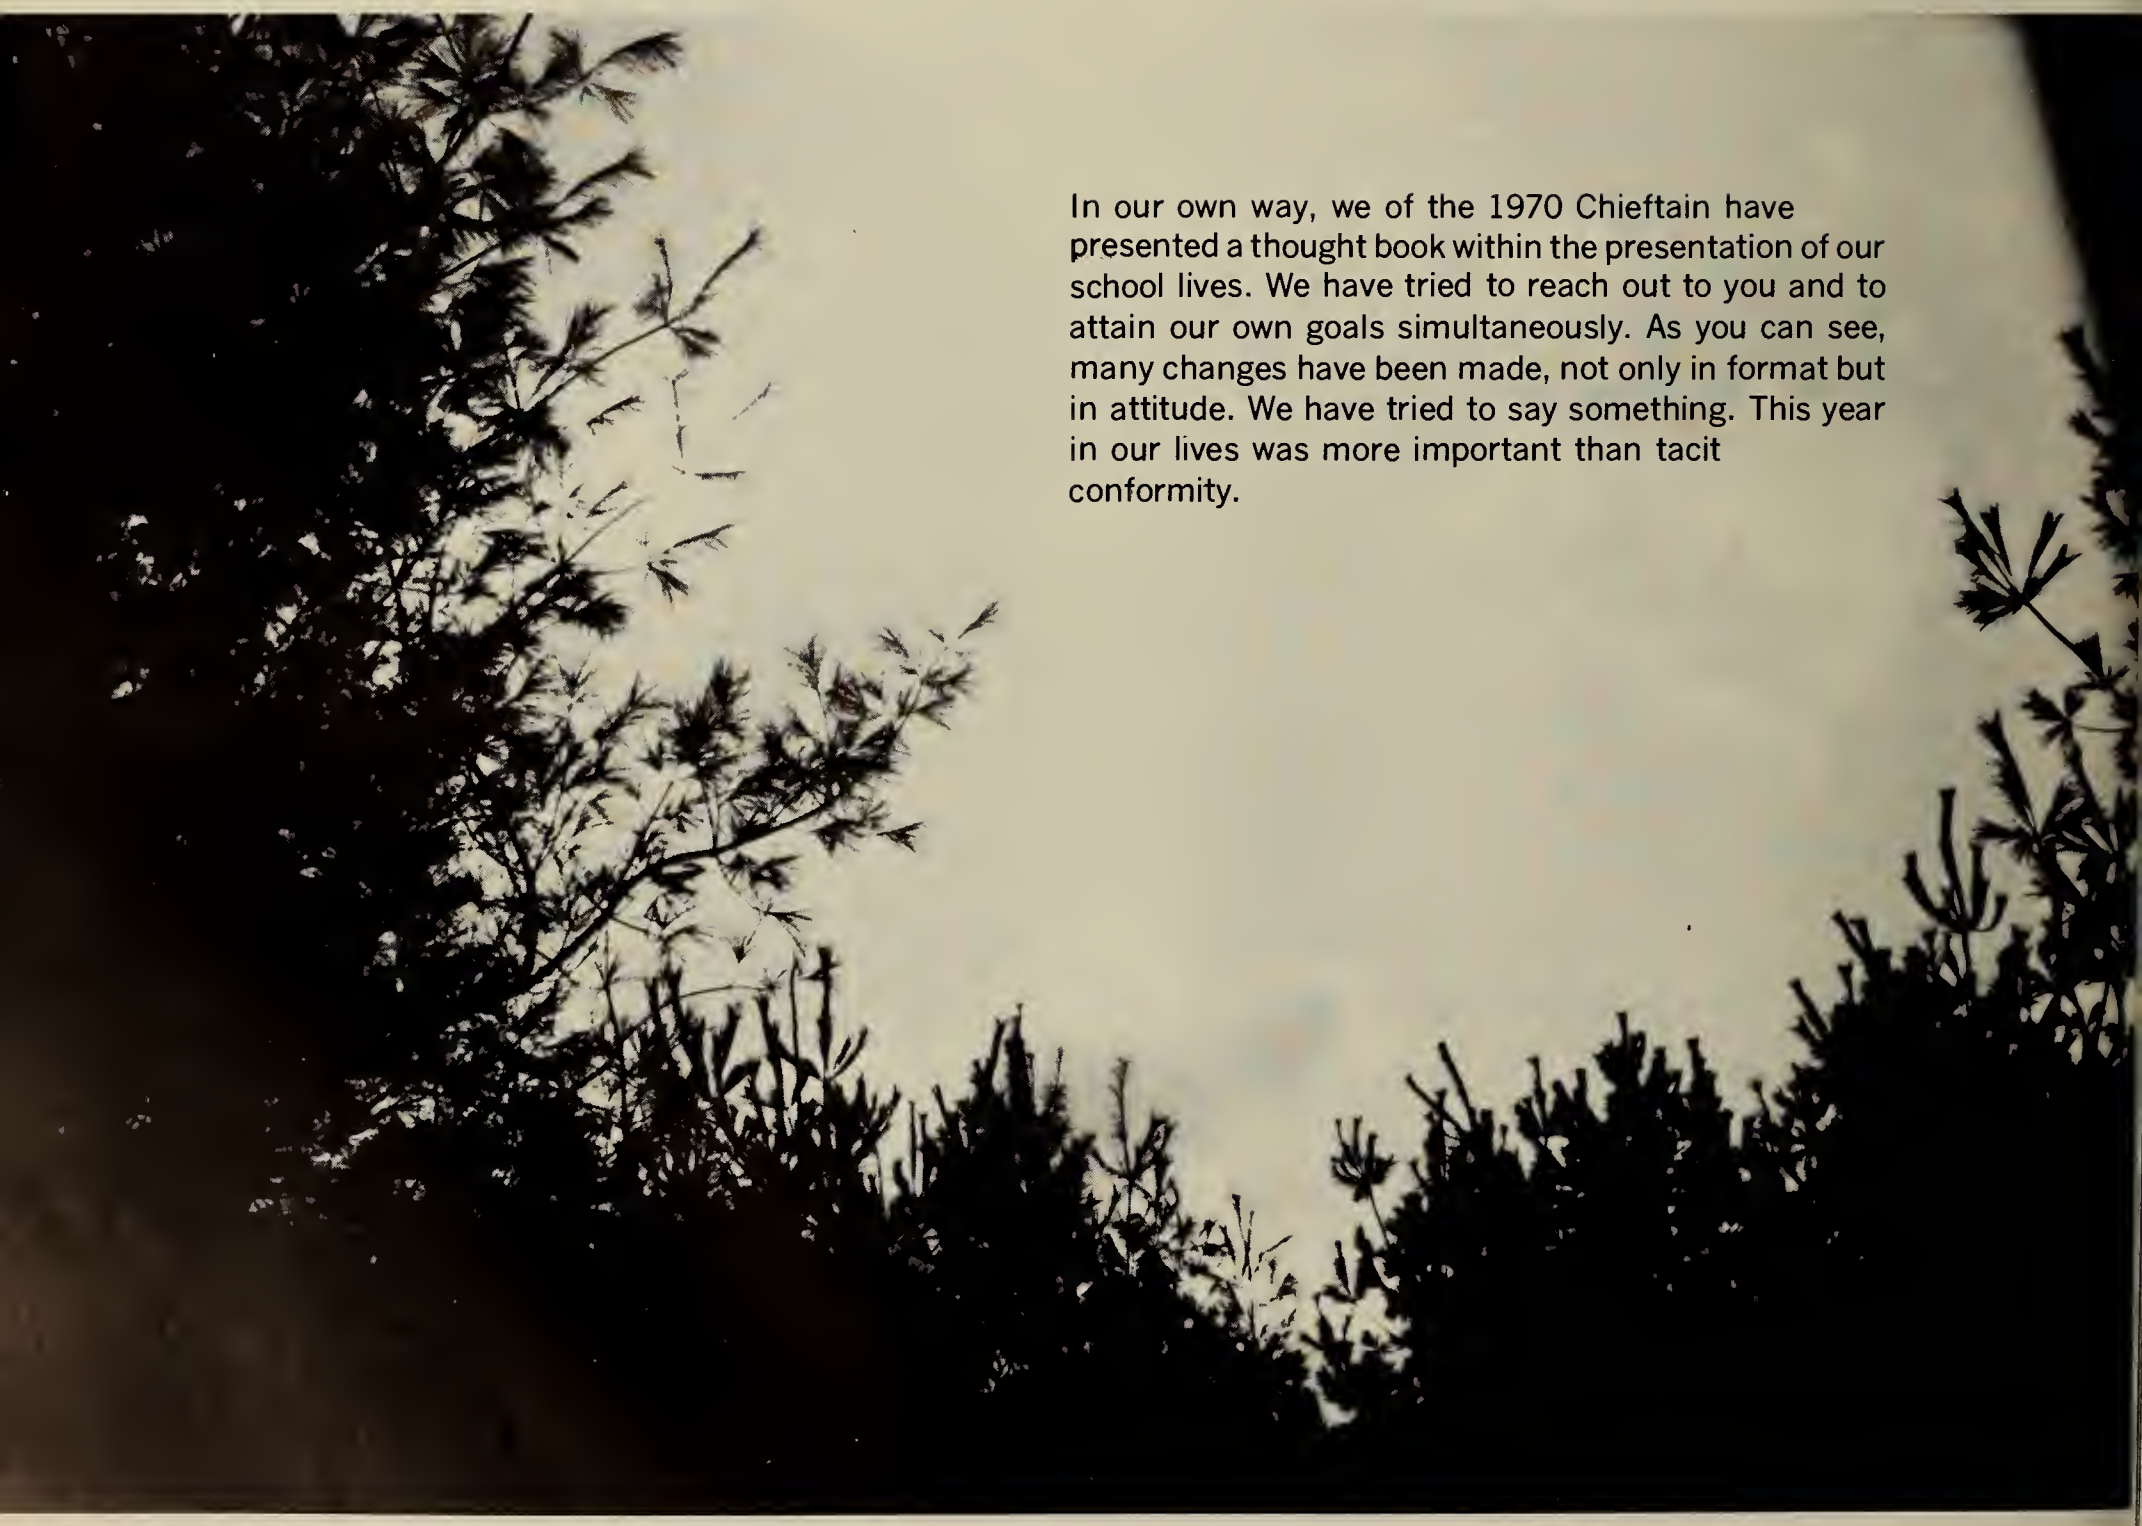
Epilogue



In our own way, we of the 1970 Chieftain have presented a thought book within the presentation of our school lives. We have tried to reach out to you and to attain our own goals simultaneously. As you can see, many changes have been made, not only in format but in attitude. We have tried to say something. This year in our lives was more important than tacit conformity.
